

Kendra Krantz sharing with students

Chance and Shannon Spaulding with students in McDonald's

Shannon Spaulding: One day after sharing in a classroom, I looked around for my team. Several children motioned for me to come over to them, so I assumed my team was there. However, the children had called me over because they wanted to see an American since they had to work in the canteen that afternoon while we shared in their classrooms. They were eager to hear the good news and began setting up chairs. The adult who supervised the canteen enthusiastically relayed the message to the students in their native tongue. After I explained that the students could put their trust in Jesus and invite Him into their hearts to accept the free gift of eternal life in Heaven, the teacher asked me if she could pray for the students so they could have this important gift. When I explained to her that each child had to make a personal decision about Jesus, she asked which children wanted to put their trust in Jesus. They all raised their hands!

Jack Brown sharing with a class

Heather Spaulding: One day, I was sharing classroom by classroom at a school. By the time I got to my fifth classroom, my voice was nearly gone. I stopped for a moment and prayed, "Lord, help me!" When I started sharing again, my voice was stronger than when I started the day! After I prayed with the students, I asked them how many of them had just put their trust in Jesus. All 73 students raised their hands!

Kendra Krantz: At one school, I walked into the classroom and noticed an albino girl in the back of the classroom by herself. She seemed confused up until the point when I started talking about Jesus. When I asked them who put their trust in Jesus, she was the first to raise her hand.

Heather Spaulding sharing in a school assembly

Ray Hall sharing with students

Ray Hall: One day, I went to a market, and while I was there, I felt led to talk to an elderly man. He had never heard the gospel, and he wanted to put his trust in Jesus. I prayed with him and saw him put his trust in Christ! I went to this market to buy a vase. God sent me to win a soul!

The three week team